Background: Stephen Jeffers v. School Board

The Individuals with Disabilities Education Act requires that public schools provide a free, appropriate education to qualifying students with disabilities. If there is a disagreement between parents and their school district, either party may request a special education due process hearing.

Surviving Due Process: Stephen Jeffers v. School Board takes you through a special education due process hearing, from initial preparations to testimony by the final witness.

You will learn how attorneys for parents and schools prepare for due process hearings. You will see exciting direct examination and cross-examination of witnesses, intense objections and arguments between counsel, and rulings by the hearing officer. You will learn about the specific rules that must be followed, mistakes people make - and why the hearing officer nearly dismissed the parents' case.

Surviving Due Process: Stephen Jeffers v. School Board is based on an actual case about a young child with autism. With different evidence and witnesses, this could easily be a case about a child with a different disability or a different legal issue. The cast includes:

Darrel Tillar Mason, Esq. Former member of the Virginia Board of Education and hearing officer
Kathleen S. Mehfoud, Esq. Nationally known school board attorney

Peter W. D. Wright, Esq. Nationally known parent attorney
