

Peter Wright of Deltaville, an attorney whose expertise is in special education law and advocacy for children with disabilities, recently led a well-attended series of presentations on special education concerns at Riverside Walter Reed Hospital.

Parents, teachers attend hospital's support and learning program

About 50 parents and teachers attended the four-part Parent Support and Learning Series held recently at Riverside Walter Reed Hospital, according to Wendy Roundy of IEP Pro Parents, an advocacy support group for parents of children with special needs. IEP Pro Parents sponsored the series along with other agencies.

Roundy said the series, presented by attorney Pete

Wright and his wife, Pam, covered changes in the laws governing public schools and discussed some of the most successful collaboration strategies for enhancing services. Also covered were tools for measuring learning and progression and positive mechanisms for establishing motivation.

Roundy said other topics included I.Q. scores and evaluations of students with learning disabilities, and understanding test results and paperwork that comes from the school system. Local businesses provided refreshments and door prizes for the series. For more information on the Wrights visit www.wrightslaw.com or for more information on IEP Pro Parents contact Roundy at 757-508-6389.